I was always looking at only you

Mitsuru Murakami's dream is to become a teacher. And during his first day at his training in education, he reunites with the man in charge of him, Kurosawa, who he's loved since the beginning of his college years.

Murakami, who feels he's disliked by Kurosawa because of the cold stares he receives, loses even his enthusiasm for the training, but makes the decision to push on.

However, once he finally starts getting comfortable and having fun teaching students, he is warned, for some reason, by Kurosawa.

But as soon as he is repelled by Kurosawa's confusing words, Kurosawa Kisses him?!

A love between a dreaming college student and his sadistic, Spartan teacher.

Even being told something like that...
Even now, I can't forget it-- Senpai's cold gaze.

I HAVE A MEETING NOW, SO...

I CAN'T LOOK KUROSAWA-SENPAI IN THE EYE.

I'll do what I ought to right now.
THIS SHOWS UP A LOT ON EXAMS.
MAKE SURE YOU MEMORIZE IT.

I HAVE A QUESTION ABOUT THE LAB LESSON...
